Experiencing domestic violence can be frightening and confusing. It can also make people feel very alone. If you have a boyfriend, girlfriend, or spouse that is abusive, there are people who want to help.

This booklet can help explain your legal rights. If you need help right now, you may need to read this book later after you are out of immediate danger.

Try not to solve this problem on your own and always try to put your safety first.

What to do RIGHT NOW:

- CALL 911.

If you are in danger right now, call the police. You do not need to decide whether a crime has been committed to call them for help. They can drive you to somewhere safe and provide you with information. You can also call them if you need medical attention.

- CALL someone to HELP and SUPPORT you.

If you have a friend or family member to help you through this, consider confiding in them. There is an agency in almost every county in North Carolina that can help you. All of them have 24-hour hotlines where you can call for information and help. These agencies are listed, by county, at the back of this book.

During a fight. . .

- Avoid small rooms where you could get trapped, and rooms that contain weapons such as kitchen knives or garage tools.
- Protect your face and head by curling into a tight ball and going into the nearest corner.
- Teach your children to stay away from the fighting so they won't get hurt.
- Make up code words to alert friends or family members that you are in danger.
- If you can confide in your neighbors, ask them to call for help if they hear the abuse or see a pre-arranged signal (for example, your porch light is on or blinking during the daytime).

Planning to leave. . .

- Think about a place you can go where your partner will not find you: a shelter, church/synagogue/mosque/temple, friend's home, hotel, etc.
- Pack an emergency bag including medication, a change of clothes, basic hygiene items, money, spare car, house & office keys, bus pass, and diapers, bottles & formula if necessary (hide the bag in a place ONLY you can easily access such as: your car trunk, shed, garage, office or neighbor's house).
- Collect and hide outside your house originals or copies of documents such as marriage & birth certificates, passports, your and your partner's social security & drivers license numbers, bank account numbers, ATM card, and home & car titles.
- Be cautious about telling your children about your escape plan, to insure they will not accidentally reveal your arrangements.

What is Domestic Violence Under North Carolina Law?

The organizations listed in the back of this booklet can help you no matter what type of abuse you have suffered.

1. Physical Abuse Under the Law.

The legal definition of domestic violence in North Carolina is physical violence and threats. Physical violence includes kicking, beating, grabbing, using a weapon against you (like a knife, gun or a hammer), slapping, pushing, pulling your hair, throwing you (on the floor, down stairs, etc.) or throwing something at you or near you in order to scare you.

Physical Abuse may also be:

- forced sex;
- destruction of your possessions to make you believe you might get physically hurt (like ripping your clothes or destroying your personal items); and
- threatening behavior. For example, if someone lets you know that if you get up from a chair or leave a room, you will be hurt physically.

complaint. If you can do it safely, leave the house and take your children, pets, and important things with you.

- EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE

Law enforcement officers are authorized by law to do whatever is reasonable to protect you from harm. The police can arrest your abusive partner if they have good reason to believe that your partner has hurt you. They can also arrest your abusive partner if they believe he has violated a court order by hurting you or coming to your house.

- COLLECT EVIDENCE THAT YOU HAVE BEEN BEATEN OR THREATENED.

When the police arrive, give them torn or bloody clothing, pictures or any other evidence of an attack (if you have any). Be sure to give the police names and phone numbers of any witnesses to your attack. If there is a court order that your partner has violated, give the police a copy of it so they can arrest him for violating the order. You should also give the police a copy of separation, divorce or custody papers, if there are any.

- ASK THE POLICE TO MAKE A REPORT OF WHAT HAPPENED.

Ask the police to take pictures of your injuries and any damage to your home or belongings and to conduct an investigation. You may ask for the police officer's name and badge number so that the officer can be a witness for you in any civil or criminal proceeding you may bring against your abusive partner. Write this information down so you can report it to the district attorney if you sign a criminal complaint.

If you do not press criminal charges against your abusive partner, the police may be less likely to help you in the future and your abusive partner may believe that he or she can get away with hurting you.

2. USE THE COURT SYSTEM.

To get started with the court system, you can contact:

- MAGISTRATE. If the police officer does not file criminal charges against your abusive partner, you can go to the local magistrate and sign a criminal complaint. Look in your local phone book in the blue pages for the telephone number and location of the magistrate's office.

- CLERK OF COURT. ℞

file a request for a civil complaint and motion for a domestic violence protective order. A local domestic violence assistance agency should be able to assist you in preparing these forms.

- DOMESTIC VIOLENCE PROGRAM. You can contact your local domestic violence agency. The phone numbers are listed at the back of this booklet.

- AN ATTORNEY.

you are married to or living with the abuser.

2. You can and should file a CHILD ABUSE COMPLAINT if:

- You suspect or know about abuse of any child. Reports of child abuse go to your county Department of Social Services. Their phone number is listed in the blue pages of your phone book under the county section.

3. You can file for CIVIL RELIEF (a "Protective Order") in the civil courts if:

- You are currently married to the person abusing you;
- You used to be married to the person abusing you;
- You are currently living with or have previously lived with the person abusing you;
- You and the person who is hurting you are related as parents or grandparents. You can not get an order against a child under 16;
- You are dating or used to date the person who is abusing you and you are different sexes;
- You and the person abusing you have a child in common.

How Does a Victim of Domestic Violence Start a Criminal Case?

1. REPORT THE CRIME AS SOON AS POSSIBLE

If you can get to a telephone, call the police immediately. If the police witness an assault, they are required by law to make an arrest on the spot. You should never remain in a place of danger in order to allow the police to witness the violence. They can make an arrest even if they don't witness it if they have enough evidence to believe an assault occurred. This is called "probable cause."

2. BE PREPARED TO TELL WHAT HAPPENED

If the police do not witness the assault, and do not find "probable cause," you may have to go to the magistrate's office to file charges. You will need to describe to the magistrate what happened to you and take along with you any witnesses to the domestic violence and any evidence of injury or abuse, including pictures, torn or blood-stained clothes and medical reports. Upon hearing your sworn testimony, the magistrate should issue a criminal summons or a warrant, even if you do not have physical evidence of abuse.

3. MOS

Stalking may also include threatening telephone calls or other forms of threatening communication which is made for the purpose of terrorizing the victim or placing the victim in fear of his/her personal safety.

- HARASSING PHONE CALLS

Using profane, indecent or threatening language against you over the telephone or on your answering machine is illegal. This includes annoying or harassing you by making false statements over the telephone or by repeated calling.

TIPS AND POINTERS FOR THE CRIMINAL TRIAL

- Attend the Trial

You will need to be present in court to testify about what happened. You will be contacted by the District Attorney's office with the court date and/or you may contact their office. Their phone number is listed in the blue pages of the phone book.

- The District Attorney is Your Attorney

You may contact the district attorney's office before the trial date to discuss the case and the evidence that you will be able to present. If there are any witnesses to the domestic violence that was committed against you, you should let

Getting Your Domestic Violence Protective Order

Step One: Prepare an

sheriff to your abusive partner and before he has the chance to come before the judge. The order is only good for ten (10) days and the hearing usually takes place within 24 hours of filing the complaint. Take steps to protect yourself during this time, especially if you think your abusive partner will hurt you because of the actions you are taking to protect yourself.

Step Three: Service on the Abuser

The law requires that the abuser receive a copy of the complaint and motion by personal delivery from your local sheriff. This process is called "service." The judge cannot go to Step Four, the 10-day hearing, until the defendant-abuser has been served. You can give the documents to the sheriff and he or she will attempt service quickly. Give the sheriff as many addresses and phone numbers to reach the abuser that you can gather. It is also helpful to give a full description of the abuser and to complete a form called "Identifying Information about Defendant," which you can get from the clerk's office.

Step Four: The 10-Day Hearing

A full hearing with you, your witness, the abuser and the judge will take place ten days after the summons is issued and the complaint is filed, assuming the abuser has been served with your complaint. Be sure you bring with you to the courtroom any witnesses to the domestic violence against you and all evidence you can gather, such as pictures, medical reports, answering machine messages, and/or torn clothing. If you do not have any evidence, do not worry. They are not required, but they do help the judge believe you. Be prepared to describe to the judge in detail what the abuser has done to you and why you are still afraid of him or her now. Tell the judge about the most recent and most violent episodes first. Be aware that your abuser can ask you questions in court. Keep calm, if you can.

Your abuser is also going to have a chance to tell his side of the story. Do not get upset if the abuser contradicts what you say. Judges have seen many cases of domestic violence and will expect contradictions in the testimony. If the judge believes you are truthful, he or she should give you some form of domestic violence relief.

If the papers are not served on the abuser by the date of the 10-day hearing, the judge may issue another temporary, ex parte order or extend your original ex parte order until the next court date. You will have to return on later dates until the abuser has been served.

Ask the Judge for Relief

Be certain that you tell the judge exactly what relief you want. You may find contact an attorney to file a motion for entry of contempt or you can file a motion yourself. The forms are available at the clerk of court's office. Again, you must write specifically what the abuser did that was in violation of the order, and you and the abuser must appear before a judge. The judge may tell the abuser that if the abuser violates the order, he or she will be jailed; or the judge may find that the order has already been violated and sentence the abuser to jail or order that he or she pay a fine.

2. What happens if you contact the abuser?

If the judge has ordered the abuser not to contact you, try to refrain from any telephone or personal contact with the abuser. Although you are not violating the law, the judge may be less likely to enforce the order. If you have let the abuser into your home (even if you have started living together again), you can reapply for relief if further domestic violence occurs, but the abuser may be less likely to take a second court order seriously. More importantly, the court may begin to question your credibility and concern for protecting your own safety.

3. What if my abuser's actions make me move?

If you have a valid protective order from another state, it will be enforced by North Carolina law enforcement agencies. Also, other states will enforce your North Carolina order and it is a good idea to get a "certified" copy from the clerk before you move.

4. How does moving affect my child custody rights?

If you relocate with or without your children because of an act of domestic violence, the court is not allowed to use that fact against you in determining custody or visitation. In custody decisions, the court will consider acts

If you cannot afford an attorney, you should contact the nearest Legal Aid or Legal Services office as soon as possible. You can find a list of those services at the back of this booklet.

American Indian North Carolinians

Some of the information provided here applies to all North Carolinians. In some cases, however, there are differences for American Indian North Carolinians. If either you or the person who abused you are members of the Cherokee Indian tribe, the proper place to file criminal and civil charges is the Tribal Court. Even if you are not Cherokee, if you live on the reservation, you should file papers with the Tribal Court.

There are a few things to know about how the Cherokee Tribal Court works. There are advocates who can help explain the process to you and make sure you are not alone. You can call the domestic violence agency listed in the table that follows for help. In order to reach the Tribal Court, call (828) 497-7874 or (828) 497-7720. If you have access to the Internet, you can read the Cherokee Tribal Rules for the NC Eastern Band of Cherokee by going to the following internet address: <http://www.tribalresourcecenter.org/ccfolder/eccodetoc.htm>.

The following is a list of organizations and tribes located around the state that will give information and referrals to American Indians. Help is available.
